

Says "love thy neighbour as yourself" taking part in an act of terrorism and killing loads of innocent people would be disobeying what they have been taught. In the Bible it also states "turn the other cheek" This means that if someone has hurt or offended you, you should just walk away. Terrorism is an act of violence and can ~~take~~ take place to get revenge. This is not what Christians have been taught.

Thirdly, Christians and Muslims both believe that just war should have a just cause. It should have the intention of defeating wrongdoing and promoting good. Some terrorist groups like

Al-Qaeda and ISIS use holy war as a justification of terrorism but this is against the teaching of the Qur'an.

Some people might disagree with me and say that Religious people should be allowed to take part in terrorist attacks because it follows most of the rules of ~~the~~ ^{Holy} war. They do not commit their terrorists attacks for financial gain, they believe they are fighting their war ^{for God.} ~~for~~ Some ~~of~~ ^{of} terrorists like suicide bomber in the Manchester attack believe that they are 'staying on the battle field until the war is over'. Some people might think that these reasons are enough to justify killing innocent people because they are following most of the rules.

Another reason people might disagree with me and is because they might believe that violence is alright if you are trying to spread your beliefs and teachings. For example during the crusade Christians were trying to spread their teachings of Christianity. They ^{also} believed they were following the rules of holy war ~~also~~.
